This collection of articles is the fruit of a research group at the Van Leer Jerusalem Institute that included both senior and junior academically affiliated researchers working in the fields of sociology, anthropology, law, social work, the arts, and psychology. The participants met throughout a period of three years within the framework of the Institute. We would like to thank all of the group members for their contribution to the success of the endeavor, especially during the tedious writing process and the exacting review and editing that took place in 2012–2013. We are deeply grateful for the support given to us by the Van Leer Jerusalem Institute to pursue our respective research on Israeli families from such different perspectives.

The Van Leer Jerusalem Institute has also supported the publication of this special issue of ISR. We would particularly like to extend our thanks to the Director of the Institute, Prof. Gabriel Motzkin, and to Shimon Alon, its Chief Operating Officer. Our special thanks also go to Prof. Hanna Herzog, the former Academic Director of the Civil Society cluster and Co-director of the Center for Women in the Public Sphere (WIPS) at the Institute, who from the very beginning supported this project enthusiastically. Dr. Tal Kohavi, the Executive Editor and Director of Publications at the Van Leer Jerusalem Institute, extended her efficient help and support, which was pivotal for the completion of our academic venture. Our deep and sincere thanks go to the Coordinator of the Civil Society cluster, Hanan Saadi, who contributed so much to the positive, cooperative atmosphere of our research group. She has been an integral part of the success of the group and the collection of the wealth of material presented here. Her patience, diligence, and efficiency have been of the utmost importance, especially during the last stages of our work on this issue.

Finally, we wish to express our gratitude to the research committee of the Behavioral Sciences Department at the College of Management–Academic Studies (COMAS) in Rishon Le-Zion, and to its Head, Prof. Israel Drori, who generously supported this project.
